The Implementation of English Conversation Program in Elementary School at Rural Area

Murni Nikmatillah, Fika Megawati, Yuli Astutik

Abstract

This article discusses how to participate in Teaching campus programs and implementing English conversation programs in rural areas. Because, English is one of the subjects considered difficult by elementary school students, especially in rural areas. This research was conducted at elementary school in Tulungagung, East Java which is a rural area. This study also uses the self-study method, in which data are taken from observations and interviews with English teachers in schools to find out the difficulties or challenges in teaching and learning in rural schools, Therefore, the self-study researcher is not the self who does the research, but rather the self being studied, not that the self is the only focus. This progression in self-study characterizes
