Background: In an online learning environment, consumer trust is crucial for helping consumers understand perceptions of risk and repercussion. Objective: to determine the relationship between consumer trust and consumptive behavior of students. Method: This research uses a correlational quantitative approach that aims to determine the relationship between two or more variables. The sampling method in this study used a random sampling approach, with a total sample size of around 241 students consisting of 34 men and 207 women. Results: According to the findings, the majority of students had moderate levels of consumer trust (59.8%) and consumptive behavior (80.8%). A coefficient value of 0.426 indicates a reasonably significant

BUKTI REVIEW DAN REVISI
